

WILLOW CREEK ASSOCIATION LEADERSHIP SUMMIT CONFERENCE INFORMATION

A good leader does more than just scale the next mountain. Leaders must cast a compelling vision so others can see it too. They recruit teams, encourage innovation, build solid infrastructures, create community, motivate change and reach down to pull others up. These are the responsibilities of leaders – to take new ground right where they are.

To help leaders succeed in these areas, Baylor is bringing a national-quality leadership conference to campus for the second consecutive year. Join us August 10-12 for the 2006 Willow Creek Leadership Summit, as more than 70,000 men and women gather together for a worldwide event dedicated to strengthening and sharpening their leadership gifts and abilities. Waco Hall will be one of 160 satellite locations for this outstanding conference. Last year, more than 450 campus and community leaders attended the Baylor site. This year, we'll unite our hearts and minds to dream new dreams and gain new skills for making them a reality.

Come hear a world-class faculty of leadership communicators and gain practical strategies for personal leadership growth. Some of the many topics will include the following:

IDENTIFY different cycles of leadership development and the unique demands they place on a leader to make adjustments along the way while learning how to inspire others.

FIND out how to decrease your stress, communicate better and increase your productivity at work. Gain practical strategies for communicating to bridge the gaps that often create conflict.

LEARN how a leader inspires people and how that inspiration is contagious.

HEAR author of Good to Great, Jim Collins, address questions that arise when business management topics are applied in ministry settings.

LISTEN to Bono, lead singer of the rock band U2, discuss his leadership role in mobilizing resources for the fight against poverty and the AIDS pandemic.
